“ Alison was my one true best friend, and I had good taste. We were there for each other no matter what, through all types of happy and sad moments, I could always pick up the phone and call Alison when I needed to talk, and vice versa. She was smart, funny, a blast to be around and an example of a strong, independent woman. She was younger than I was, but she was light years ahead of me as to a knowledge of the world and how it works. She grew up in California and NYC, whereas I grew up in a small community in New Jersey, growing up playing with box turtles and such. We went to the same private boarding school and the rest was history. I was very lucky to have had Alison in my life, and I miss her more than I can possibly say.
